"I WOKE ONE DAY."

I woke one day to find that Youth was going.
With Time, who takes good things and ill,
To join a vague procession, ever growing.
Of ghosts who people dreamland still;
Those whom the years have rent world-wide asunder.
Old friends once daily looked upon;
Some felt upon the earth, and some rest under.
No doubt; and do some still regret, I wonder,
The glad old days, the good time gone?
Time takes away his dust-heap of dead roses,
Of empty cups, of broken vows,
Spent love; and all dim memory discloses,
The morning after Youth's carouse.
He shows us shades of forgotten faces,
We hear the voices far away
Of revellers, who leave us still some traces
Of songs whose echoes haunt old halting-places,
Where night was oftentimes to day.
And many rest in sleep by dreams unbroken,
By winds unswept, by stars unseen,
Never to speak again as they have spoken.
Or know lost joys that might have been.
When slow-departing Summer day yet lingers
Between the purpling western bars,
When winds sound faint, as if some far-off
singers
Were touching harps with tired, trembling fingers,
We see lost eyes smile in the stars.

DEVICES ON COINS.

The History of the Vignettes That Adorn Our Metallic Currency.

Chicago Inter Ocean.

The act of April 2, 1792, which established a mint in Philadelphia, then the seat of government, provided that upon one side of the gold and silver coins of the United States there should be an impression emblematic of liberty, with an inscription of the word "liberty" and the year of the coinage, and upon the reverse the figure or representation of an eagle, with the inscription "United States of America."

The act of January, 1837, made similar provisions, and when the silver bill providing for the restoration of the "dollar of our daddies" was enacted, it was provided that the same inscription should be placed on the standard dollar. But few people outside the mints understood the care and delicacy required to produce well-finished coins; but the work of coining or perfecting a piece is as nothing compared with the designing and engraving of a die. The extremely limited space presented by the surface of a coin for a display of artistic embellishment is of itself a very unfavorable condition imposed upon the inventive faculty of the artist, and when the more rigid limitation upon the relief is considered, it is obvious that the artist has to work with shackles on his hands to an extent unknown in any other department of art. It has often been the case that artists of well-known reputation, but having no experience in the engraving of coins, have had designs of great artistic merit rejected simply for the reason that such designs were not adapted to the purpose for which they were intended.

The device on our coins emblematic of Liberty is no doubt devised from a similar device on the coins of the Roman Republic, anterior to Augustus, and has much of classic authority in its favor. Its adoption does not seem to have been determined by any specific act or instructions, and in fact the journals of the Senate and other proceedings of Congress show that the head of the President was first intended as the device for one side of the coins.

The first coins struck were cents, in 1793, on which the emblem was a female head with hair flying wildly behind. In 1795 the cap of Liberty was introduced, supported on a wand projecting behind the head. In 1796 or 1797 the cap was discarded.

The first silver coins were struck in 1794. The head of Liberty, with flowing hair and without the cap, formed the obverse. This style was retained, with slight modifications, until about the year 1808, when a more pleasing head of Liberty, with hair dressed and cap, was adopted. The device was taken from life, and was considered a model in good taste of the fashion of the time. The inscription of the word Liberty was at the time transferred from the margin of the coin to the band of the cap.

The first gold coins struck in 1795 were ornamented with a head of Liberty and a cap headdress corresponding with the fashionable headdress of that period. This continued until 1807, when the headdress on gold coins was made to conform to that on the silver. Upon the change of standard in 1834 the liberty cap of the goddess was removed from the head, and the hair confined by a band inscribed with the word Liberty. The next change took place near the end of the year 1838, the hair being looped up behind and entwined with braids, a couple of stray curls hanging loosely upon the neck, and the front of the head embellished with a tiara inscribed "Liberty." Since then the changes in the artistic devices and designs upon coins have been few and unimportant. The reverse of all our larger coins has always presented to a certain extent the heraldic elements forming the arms of the Union, and no doubt in accordance with the almost universal usage of the independent sovereignties, of presenting a device on the reverse of their coinage bearing heraldic allusions more or less elaborate, to the arms of the Government or sovereign authority. In the various changes made from time to time, every effort has no doubt been made to present as beautiful coins as the limited space would permit, and also to secure designs which would present no difficulty in mechanical execution. The head of "Liberty" on the standard dollar, designed by a young English engraver, is chaste and beautiful, and is considered by artists the best executed head that has ever appeared on United States coins. It is so well distributed as to be susceptible of easy work under the die, and, like its predecessor of 1808, was taken from life.

"LET WELL ENOUGH ALONE."

As it is agreed that the present situation of the world is not the millennium, but that there is still much improvement possible which can be compassed only by brave thought and free speech and cheerful persistence of endeavor through disappointment and delay and defeat, it is curious to see what a rough welcome the pioneer receives. If a man says seriously and decisively that honesty is the best policy, or that a lie well struck to is, after all, not as good as the truth, he is saluted as a hypocrite and impostor and pretender, and every liar and swindler and charlatan turns upon him with a sneer, asking him why he sets himself up for a saint, and why what is good enough for others is not good enough for him.

It is plain that if a crowd is to advance, somebody must go first. But in the great human crowd known as the world, or the race, or mankind, or society, the one, or the few who move naturally forward are denounced as visionaries or incendiaries, as fools or knaves. If it is in a religious denomination that the step is taken, the foremost man is bowled over as a heretic or schismatic. If it is in a political party, he is a fanatic and an idealist. If in science, he is a quack and a lunatic. There are no Socrates, Luther, Galileo—the list is illustrious and familiar. But we rise from kneeling to the hero of yesterday only to find a stone at the hero of to-day. A fresh and generous enthusiasm hasten to show that there is probably a western route to the Indies—perhaps in politics, perhaps in philosophy. But he suddenly feels the Old Man of the Sea upon his shoulders, and he hears the familiar words: "It is always wise, my young friends, to let well enough alone; and many men have prospered exceedingly by minding their own business. Moreover, those who run before they are sent, and who suppose that wisdom waited to appear until they were born, will probably find that experience is a sure guide, and that to hold by the ancient way is to hold by the way of safety."

This wisdom was a wise four hundred years ago as it is to-day. Luther heard it; Columbus heard it; every man impatient of the social, mental and moral treadmill has heard it, and happily they have despised it, or this Magazine would not be written, and printed, and read everywhere, and America itself, in a distinctive national sense, would not have been. The American orator, who salutes every ardent proposition of change with a sneer, and who resists the general spirit of progress by echoing once more the ancient "gag," "I have always observed that to let well enough alone is never a dangerous policy," is as solemnly droll a figure as a sage of the forecastle at sea who should declare that to raise a sail would be idle or perilous while the ship rode on an even keel.

It there is to be progress in any direction, no existing situation can be well enough, in the sense that it cannot be improved. The same assertion, could it have been the rule of conduct, would have made the present situation impossible, because it would have retained that from which it grew. It is the argument of stagnation and paralysis, of mental asphyxia and of moral death. This is the year in which especially to recall this truth, four hundredth anniversary of Luther's birth. "He hit the Pope on the crown, and the monks in the belly," said the witty Erasmus. They were well enough, according to the general feeling and the exhortation of the orators, but Luther did not think it wise to let well enough alone. How many of those who think they revere Luther above all men, hunt him to-day, in some one of his modern forms, as zealously as he was hunted then, and they hunt him with the same cry that wise and good men will let well enough alone.—Editor's Easy Chair, in Harper's Magazine for July.

What the Republicans "Still Claim."

The Virginia Chronicle Democrat-ically says:

Bills of various sorts have been introduced in Congress already, the true intent of which under one disguise and another is to keep Republican office-holders in office after the new Democratic Administration takes hold.

After having held office all these years, having lied about Democrats, abused them, slandered them, and having contributed money and time to defeat the Democratic party, these fellows do not want to bow to the popular verdict that commanded them to get out. They want to be kept in. They want a Democratic Administration, that they did their best to defeat, to keep them in their offices. Hence these many bills to extend the civil service regulations, and provide against the removal of this and that sort of officeholder.

We are inclined to concur with the Cleveland (Ohio) Plaindealer, which declares that the Democrats in Congress should not allow themselves to be entrapped into any of these schemes. They should pay no heed to the squeals of the officeholders who do not want to go.

The understanding has been that when the Democrats came into power there would be a general cleaning out in the civil service. It was understood that the change should be thorough and complete. It ought to be. Democratic rule will not be for long if it is not.

We hold this duty to be foremost. There can be no successful reform with Republicans in office, especially of the sort who have been in so long. There can be no successful administration with the offices in the hands of the enemies of the Democratic party who will use their official positions as they have ever done to injure and defeat the Democratic party. It is all nonsense to suppose otherwise.

These officeholders assume that the country cannot get along without them. They are insolent in that way, and their insolence should be met by showing them the door. We hold that the country can get along very well without any Republicans in office. We want to make a practical demonstration of that.

COMPILING THE LAWS.

There is a great deal of truth in what the Enterprise says in the following:
The Hon. W. E. F. Deal has issued a prospectus presenting the need, in his opinion, of the re-compilation of the laws of Nevada. We have not seen a copy of the monograph. Doubtless it was intended only for the consideration of members of the legal fraternity. We have some recollection, however, of the introduction of several bills at the last session of the Legislature providing for the execution of this work, two of which were passed though defeated by Governor Adams' veto. The Governor then assigned two reasons for withholding his approval from the measure; (1) the greater necessity for a new compilation in the event of the framing of a new Constitution because of the large number of laws which would be necessary to meet its requirements (2) and the large expense to the State of a compilation while its Treasury is in such a condition as to require strict economy in the expenditure of its funds. The first reason has in a measure disappeared, but the second still retains its force as against the policy of engaging in the work at this time.
Mr. Deal suggests that the Legislature, at its next session, shall contract with him for the publication of a new work which shall include also the compilation of the statutes of 1885. He will, he says, furnish the State with 600 copies complete of the compilation for $7,000, and to have at least 300 copies more for sale at $15 each. The work is to be delivered to the Secretary of State within eight months after the close of the session. It will be in one large volume, and the paper, binding, indexing, mechanical execution, etc., is to be first-class. The book is to receive the approval of the Supreme Court of the State before the sale shall be binding upon the State for the disbursement of the $7,000.
However much the practicing attorneys-at-law in Nevada may feel the need of the proposed revision, it is an open question whether or not the State should be put next year to the expense of having the work done. The lawyers of Nevada may now be counted on one's fingers and toes. They are at least hardly numerous enough to justify the outlay of so much money for their exclusive benefit. So far as the State, county and township officers are concerned they have been supplied with copies of the Compiled Laws of 1873 and of the several volumes of statutes published since the issue of the former. There is very little litigation in this State now; certainly not enough to keep employed the present number of attorneys. They can all hunt up the law on any given subject by exploring the statutes as published in their present form. They will not charge any fee for retainers and fees in the event of having a volume placed in their hands which shall contain in a compact form the whole body of legislation with the rulings thereon of the highest tribunal in the State. Why the Legislature should appropriate $7,000 at this time for the special benefit of a few attorneys is not very clear.
For less than half the foregoing sum a better scheme, having the same end in view, might be devised. We refer to the possible early codification of the laws of Nevada. There is no occasion for publishing such bulky volumes as a compilation involves. Condensation, and not compilation, is what is required. About four-fifths, if not more, of the statutory verbiage is superfluous, and a large portion of the written law is obsolete. The Legislature might provide at its next session for a Code Commission to revise the statutes, codify them and report the result of its labors to the Legislature of 1877 for adoption. The Judges of the Supreme Court, the Attorney General and some competent member of the bar might be selected to do the work. Our Attorney General has little or nothing to do to occupy his time, and he is paid liberally for doing nothing. The Judges and the Attorney General should be required to do this work without extra compensation. The fifth member of the commission would be entitled to a fair allowance. Mr. Deal, who has already given much study to the condition of our laws, with a view to their intelligent compilation, would, in our opinion, be the right man in that place. As for inflicting upon the law literature of Nevada another dose of compiled laws, that is a proceeding to be very seriously considered before final action is taken.

Nevada in Good Humor.

The New York World has interviewed Mr. Nevada with the following result: As regards the alleged threat of Mapleson to sue the prima donna for damages, she said, good naturedly, "Oh, he won't do that. He's too good. Besides I can prove that I was ill, and then I am going to sing in the future just when he wants me to. Oh, we will smooth things out before long. I promise the public that I shall never disappoint them again."

Felix Levy, of Winnemucca, is visiting relatives in Reno.

The Walker Lake Reservation.

The Enterprise says:
The Walker Lake Reservation is a rich tract of agricultural land, fringed by mineralized belts, which, under present rulings of the Land Office, are closed to the prospector, and therefore dead and useless as a part of the public domain. The nomadic Pinte is "monarch of all he surveys" in that region, and is so tenacious of his rights that he will not permit a white man to trespass, in the slightest degree, upon the land which a generous Government has set apart for the benefit of the more than useless Indian, who spends his time in neighboring mining camps, looking for gold scraps at the back doors of restaurants, and never returns to the reservation unless pushed by stress of weather. The Walker Lake tract is a piece of very rich country. It is three miles wide and about fifty-four in length, the summits of the hills on either side forming the lateral boundaries. The mountains are streaked with veins that are known to be valuable, bearing copper, silver and gold, but the prospector is debarred from working this ground, because it is, so to speak, consecrated to a lot of worthless savages, who, like the dog in the manger, will neither work themselves nor let anybody else work. The valley land is as rich as any in the world, but a mere scrap of it only is utilized. If it were declared public land and thrown open to settlement it would afford homes to several thousands under the Pre-emption law. The Pyramid Reservation is large enough to accommodate all the Indians in Nevada, and afford homes for all who wish to locate there. Therefore there is no good reason why the Walker Lake tract should not be declared public domain and thrown open to the many who would like to make homes there.

SANITARY CONDITION OF ARMY STATIONS.—The Adjutant-General's office in Washington has issued an order to the Division of the Pacific, requiring in addition to the usual monthly inspection of the sanitary condition of military posts, a weekly one, with a view to the application of such remedial measures as may be necessary to insure complete protection from malarial diseases. Post Commanders are authorized to co-operate with the civil authorities to prevent the introduction and spread of cholera.

Only one full-rigged ship built in Baltimore, Md., now hails from that port and bears the American flag. This is the Maconaulay, which was built twenty-nine years ago, and is now lying there getting ready for another voyage.
